A modern home designed by Marcel Breuer in Litchfield, Conn. is on the market for $3.8 million.

Mr. Breuer, who designed New York's Whitney Museum of American Art and is also known for his furniture, created a single-story home of stone, white-stucco and glass. He also designed a cantilevered guest studio nearby. The 1965 home, on 9.5 wooded acres with a stream, has four bedrooms and is one of several Breuer-designed homes in Litchfield.

Owners Donna Cristina and Barbara Dente, fashion advertisers, are selling because they plan to spend more time in Miami. They bought the property in 2007 for $1.5 million and spent about a year restoring it from the ground up. "It cost more to redo the house than to buy the house," says Ms. Cristina, who worked off original plans during the renovation. Roger Saucy of Klemm Real Estate has the listing.
